

The digital realm used to evoke a sense of infinite freedom to create, outside of the bounds of material reality.

In this immaterial space, things are allowed to be preserved for eternity, and creations outlive their creator.

Age is no longer visible through the cracks in the matter or in the fading hues of a once striking pigment, but in the datedness of an aesthetic.

The digital register is always already there, in rooms, buildings and pockets.

A flat screen is all that separates the home screen, and the physical home which it occupies, - or rather, provides the illusion of a separation between the World Wide Web and the World.

Laying passively in your bed, exposed to a neverending flux of information, becomes a crucial part in the creative experience of the artist living in today's reality.

For some reason, there appears to be a primal need for a home that transcends the physical order. A primal need to say and believe: home is where your home screen is.

*"The Weekend" is composed of the works of 6 local artists working in a variety of disciplines and takes place in an old home imported to Israel from Maine, US, in 1866. The immediate impressions of such a space are those of a displaced home, perfectly stuck in time, evoking an uncanny, - unhomely feeling. As such, this exhibition aims to explore the encounter between the virtual space that continues to act as a home for generations to come, and the actual, material home within which it takes place. The artists have grown within these virtual contexts and as such their work reflects the spirit of a quick, everchanging, post ironic digital age. These works, touching upon internet culture and virtual romance, create a sense of longing for this uncanny environment - i.e. the virtual space - a place where there is no identity, no rules and limitations, a home that fits in the palm of your hand, - a sanctuary always within reach.

Thus, as a form of a radical reversal, this exhibition will display works that aim to materialize digital objects in a home that in its essence attempts to break away with its own material.

info@hi-mountain.net @hi_mountain_